[mex235] Heading toward moving target

A particle moves in the xy-plane under the constraint that its velocity vector is always directed toward the point $(x = f(t), y = 0)$, where $f(t)$ is differentiable. Make a sketch of the situation described here and show that this constraint is nonholonomic.

Solution: